A Bachelor Girl.

Oh, you bachelor men! You again and again Put our little maid-hearts in a whirl; But, with all you may do And for all you may suc,

You've no chance with the bachelor girl. I'm a bachelor girl With my fore-locks in curl-You may woo and may sue as you may,

'm contented to tarry Before I shall marry. For a bachelor girl will I stay. But you need not despair, As a girl I am there;

So my angel-wings now I'll unfurl, Will this suit you and me? I'm a Vassar A. B. That's why I'm a bachelor girl.

Woman Against Women.

-Lesile's Weekly.

"Women are patronizing creatures, to be sure," says a writer in the Baltimore News. "I know whereof I speak, for my labors neglected; my manners are fair and I iress in any way that I don't lose every particle

"I feel it oozing out at my finger tips | wait in the ante-chamber for the I send up my card first, of with a bomb concealed about my person may disturb the serenity of her ladyship.

I feel that I deserve all this and worse things for obtruding my miserable personality upon such a noble presence.

"When I finally emerge it takes a half hour of the air and the sunshine to bring back the just-as-good-as-you-are feeling that is the birthright of every true Ameri-

"But there's another woman who is even more appalling. It is she who patronizes one openly and explains her conduct by saying that her parents trained her to be courteous to the 'laboring classes.' I meet her quite frequently, and I invariably feel like replying as a well-known California newspaper woman did once under like cir-

"'I always give any news I can to you working girls,' said the great lady. " 'Thank you,' responded the reporter, cordially, 'and now if you'll tell me where your husband's coal yard is I think I'!! reciprocate by ordering my fuel from him." And the great lady wasn't a bit pleased. "I saw a story in one of the New York papers the other day that shows the patronizing woman is not a product of any in the Martens. one city or condition. It's a very good story and here it is: "A young woman who has won marked success as an illustrator of children's stories paid a call last week upon the woman editor of a certain periodical. The proprietor of the periodical had already offered the young artist every inducement to contribute to any of his publications as much as she would consent to do, choosing her own subjects and her own terms. The editors of the other periodicals published by the house and other editors of periodicals published by other houses had made her most flattering overtures. She and her work had just been exploited in a leading critical review as one of the notable art developments of the end of the century. In face of all this the work the young woman proposed to do for the woman editor's Henry. periodical was pretty small beer. The woman editor began by keeping the artist waiting an unconscionable time. Word was finally brought that she might enter the august presence. 'Well, Miss Blank,' said the editor with a swing of her swivel chair and all the authority of a country school teacher, 'and what can I do for you?"

as the students in New York are concerned. There are some such cases, but they are extremely rare. In the great majority of cases the students, if they cannot afford to pay for the necessities from their own pocketbook, stay away from the city until they can borrow sufficient funds. Many girls with thin purses attend only half-day classes, and work at some commercial occupation the rest of the day. I know of several girls who do enough type-writing in the mornings to pay for their afternoon art lessons and their board besides, while numbers of students work for classes at night only. "The art students of New York do not seek living places in any one particular part of the town, as do the students of Paris.
